AUTHORITIES ARE PROBING THE CAUSE OF BROWN'S DEATH

Have Not Yet Arrived at Any Official Decision In The Case

LIGHTS WERE BURNING
Mother-in-Law Contends That It Was Murder, Not Suicide

PALMYRA, N. J., Jan. 17.—Authorities had not yet arrived at an official decision today as to the death by shooting of Bradley Brown, 29-year-old Swarthmore College graduate, and wealthy business man.

Brown, the son of the late Charles T. Brown, of Philadelphia, was found dead in the living room of his home. A bullet had passed through the left sleeve of Brown's overcoat and entered his right lung. Another bullet had passed through his overcoat and lodged in his side.

Dr. Dean Lefevre, physician who was first summoned, said he found powder burns on Brown's clothing. He said he believed Brown had been murdered, and declared it would be unusual, if not impossible, for a bullet to have passed through the overcoat sleeve in the manner found if Brown himself had fired the shot.

The lights were on in the house, but the doors were locked. He was half dressed. A .32 calibre pistol containing four empty shells was on the floor beside the body.

Three gin bottles, empty, and one partly filled, were found in Brown's garage.

However, Ellis H. Parker, chief of Burlington County detectives, said he would await the result of an autopsy today before reaching any conclusions as to the manner of death.

Parker said he hoped that Mrs. Grace McCaully Brown, the widow, would be able to throw some light on recent actions of her husband, when she returns from Beaver, Pa., where she had gone Sunday night with their two-year-old daughter, Barbara, to visit Mrs. Brown's parents. The Browns had been married three years.

Brown was found shot to death in the toy-littered front room of his house, a few feet from the front door. He was shot twice, once in the back and again through the side. Police found a revolver near the body. Four cartridges were discharged and the muzzle was jammed with dirt.

Near the garage adjacent to the house were evidences of a fierce struggle. In the garage police found Brown's car, the motor still warm and the headlights on.

Morris Beck, chief of the Palmyra police, who found the body last night when he came in answer to summons from neighbors who heard shouts for help, declared one of the bullets could not have been self-inflicted.

Mrs. McCaully, who was State Secretary of Welfare in the administration of Gov. John S. Fisher, declared from a sick-bed there was "no doubt" in her mind that her son-in-law was murdered.

"It was nothing in his recent life, it was something much older than that," she asserted.

Brown was one of the State's important witnesses at the inquest held in the summer of 1929 in the slayings of Ruth M. Wilson and her former fiancé, Horace Roberts, his classmates at Swarthmore College. They were found shot to death, their bodies partially clothed, in the girl's room at her home. A verdict of murder and suicide was returned by the coroner's jury which found Roberts shot the girl because she broke their engagement and then killed himself.

Seniors At Bensalem Stage Fine Production

CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, Jan. 17.—Senior class of Bensalem township high school presented last week its annual dramatic production. This year's play was entitled "The Professor Crashes Through," an amusing three-act comedy.

The students are to be highly commended for their fine performance. Joseph Copestake, as the capricious Professor Adams, did exceptionally well. Harry Seltzer, as the star football player of Amrest, displayed the same fine talent as he has done many times. Helen Smith's portrayal of a modern co-ed was admirable. As Carrie, the colored maid, Kathryn Balazs provoked much laughter with her characteristic wobble. The part of the old maid daughter of Professor Adams was played well by Lillian Hetterington. Although having minor parts, Roll Cassile, Charles Bampton and Harry Wharfe did fine in the short time they were before the audience.

GEORGE DEGENER WANTED

Bristol police have been asked to locate George Degener and advise him that his sister, Minnie, died Sunday in New York. Funeral services are to be held tomorrow. Chief Jones requested publication of the item in view of his inability to locate any individual by the name of Degener.

READY FOR TRUCK WAR

Trenton, N. J., Jan. 17.—With the help of the Legislature, the State of New Jersey today strengthened its lines for another truck war, as Pennsylvania state troopers began to enforce the new requirement passed at the Keystone State's last special legislative session.

Without a dissenting vote the New Jersey Senate last night passed the Barbour bill, giving the Commissioner of Motor Vehicles added power to enforce a similar requirement in a drive on Pennsylvania trucks entering New Jersey.

Pennsylvania State Police in the Philadelphia district, began stopping trucks from other states which did not bear Pennsylvania license plates Sunday at midnight, when the 15 days of grace expired.

The Barbour bill empowered commissioners to exact fines from owners of motor vehicles registered in other states which do not recognize reciprocity agreement fees in the same amount as the license charge for New Jersey motors in such states.

The Senate also initiated legislation providing for toll charges on the new high-speed bridge between Newark and Jersey City, opened to traffic a couple of months ago.

Held in Triangle Slaying

Harry Parry, coast guard officer, of Staten Island, N. Y., is shown (left) as he was fingerprinted at Elizabeth, N. J., following his arrest on a charge of having slain Garnet Brotherton, a riding master, in the latter's Staten Island home. Parry readily admitted the slaying, asserting that his wife, Mrs. Jeanette Parry (inset), was infatuated with the riding master. When the coast guardsman called at Brotherton's home to remonstrate with him, the handsome horseman, according to Parry, ridiculed the husband and told him to "stick around and I'll show you how to make love." Mrs. Parry is held as a material witness.

Thus She Shut Him Off

(By the Stroller)

A Bristol merchant, hearing what he believed to be the roar of an airplane flying at low altitude the other day, halted in his tasks for a minute. Suddenly the deafening roar ceased, and the motor failed to respond again.

Rushing from his store, with horrible thoughts in his mind, he vainly scanned the sky while he listened for a crash, for surely that plane was just overhead. Which way to turn? What to do? Someone would surely be killed!

Just then his wife appeared. "What are you looking for?" "An airplane whose motor has just stopped," he frantically yelled.

"Stopped, nothing," was the wife's reply. "I was using the vacuum cleaner, and just shut the power off."

CRAVING FOR CANDY LEADS TO ARREST

Albert Marquette, With Loot, Falls Into Clutches of Police

IMPLICATES OTHERS

A craving for candy led Albert Marquette, 18, 201 New Brook street, into the role of a thief and then into the hands of the police who have held him for a further hearing on Monday, January 23rd.

Marquette, with others, he says, went along the tracks of the P. R. R. Sunday night and "spotted" box cars. One was found to their liking and the seal broken by someone. Three cartons of chocolate wafers, weighing in all 90 pounds, were taken.

Marquette was found with the cartons in an express wagon walking along Madison street, late Sunday night.

When Marquette first arrived at the police headquarters he said that he and some other boys had found the wafers along the hedge near the plant of the Bristol Patent Leather Company. Police searched the vicinity at once but found nothing. Then the officers checked all of the freight cars along the Bristol siding and finally came upon two cars which had been broken open and some of the contents taken.

Police are still checking-up on the case and it is expected that other arrests will be made before Marquette comes up for his further hearing on Monday.

This is a follow-up of the famous "Womanless Wedding" and has already proven in other towns where it has been staged, a greater mirth-provoker and beauty spectacle than the former play.

SALARIES SHOW DROP IN CO. OFFICES DURING PAST YEAR

Decrease in Salaries and Expenses of Office Holders Was $13,479.88

BALANCE OF $81,580.53

Audit to Be Completed and Then Presented To The Court

DOYLESTOWN, Jan. 17.—Bucks county's housekeeping bill for 1932 made public today in the statement of finances issued by the Bucks County Commissioners shows a total expenditure of $665,549.91 and a balance in the treasury on January 1, 1933, amounting to $81,580.53.

The increase in expenses over the previous year amounted to $32,711.52, due to increased bills paid charitable institutions, increased court costs and a number of other items, all of which were passed upon carefully.

There was, however, a decrease in 1932 over the previous year of $13,479.88 in salaries and expenses of county office holders; a decrease of $35,754.23 in tax exonerations and costs; a decrease of $1,235.30 in assessors' pay and a decrease in the amount of coroner's bills.

In the face of an economic depression in 1932, and in spite of the fact that an increased "county business" called for the expenditure of more money than the previous year, the careful conduct of affairs of the Board of County Commissioners made it possible to close the year with over $81,000 in the treasury.

The annual county statement will be audited this week by the County Auditors and will then be presented to the Court for approval. Members of the Board of Commissioners include John S. Roberts, Jr., Bristol; Norman Refsnider, Richlandtown; Clarence E. Benner, Quakertown; and Ernest H. Harvey, acting clerk, of Langhorne.

In 1932 charitable institutions cost Bucks county $9786.89 more than in 1931 or $109,849.26. The appropriation to the Bucks County Home was $60,000. It cost $24,641.89 for care of inmates at the Norristown State Hospital; $11,115.39 for care of inmates at Allentown State Hospital; $3,303.47 for care of inmates at Wernersville State Hospital; $232.88 for care of inmates at Farview State Hospital; $2196.20 for care of children at Lutheran Children's Bureau; $350.91 for care of inmates at Laurelton State Village; $3036.62 for care of children at Catholic Children's Bureau. It also cost $499 for the burial of ten indigent persons, $558.59 expenses of forty-seven commissions in lunacy.

Court costs in 1932 amounted to $74,826.16, which included $18,142.40 for pay of grand and traverse jurors; $26,443.86 for court officers' pay; $12,865.51 for criminal costs paid by county; $4173.92 for maintenance and detention home for care of children; $392.50 for jury commissioners' salaries and expenses; $1054.10 for liquor analysis; $400.99 for transcribing testimony; $57 for meals served to jurors; $1048.07 for detective service; $2430.60 for costs on Justices' transcripts and several other items.

Court House expenses last year amounted to $45,888.06. Prison and other institutional expenses last year amounted to $38,676.19, an increase of $1849.45. This included $9653.15 for support of prisoners at the Eastern Penitentiary; $4068.91 for support of prisoners at the Pennsylvania Industrial Reformatory; $2181.05 for support of inmates at Glen Mills School; $662.50 for support of inmates at Philadelphia Reformatory for Boys; $748.49 for support of inmates at State Industrial School for Women; $478.56 for support of inmates at Pennsylvania State School; $1712.86 for support of inmates at Sleighton Farm School for Girls; maintenance of Marie Tiliotta, $595.38; medical attention, $636.55 and other items.

The total cost of salaries and expenses of officers of the Court House last year amounted to $84,921.42, a decrease of $13,479.88, due in part to the fact that the installation of modern bookkeeping machines and other labor-saving devices, made it possible to cut down the cost of extra clerk hire. In the office of the County Commissioners last year there was a decrease of $5619.02 in salaries and expenses alone.

Damage and maintenance of roads cost the county $94,766.04 in 1932, including $25,585.93 for road damage settlements; $13,94

UNEMPLOYED MONEY

Much is being heard nowadays about dollars at work. What does it mean?

A dollar in a savings fund is the most simple form of investment and is a typical dollar work. Any dollar that earns something for its owner is a working dollar. And every dollar that earns for its owner is creating capital, credit, business or employment for others.

Money in the bank earns interest; in securities, dividends, in business, profits; in industry, profits and wages; in life insurance, capital, dividends and protection. In each instance it is money at work.

Dollars at work dig mines, turn mill wheels, till the soil, provide employment and create profits and credit. But what does the idle dollar do? It toils not, neither does it spin. It has a home only, and its home may be an old sock or a straw mattress. Nor can it claim greater security than the working dollar.

The idle dollar is out of a job, does not work, cannot earn. In a year's time in 20 years, as long as it is kept in idleness, it will be the same old dollar; it will not have increased a penny's worth.

Thrifty and caution do not require that money be hoarded. Billions of dollars invested during the period of inflation are worth a hundred cents on the dollar today and are still working and earning. And many dollars hoarded during a period of deflation will be lost to the hoarders through fire and theft.

AN UNIQUE ART

Very few people are aware of the fact that the type they read in their newspapers, magazines, books and advertising has been designed by someone; that there is an art which has to do with the designing of new type faces. Reading has become so commonplace that most adult readers have forgotten that there are letters of the alphabet. So long as they do not intrude themselves due to some peculiarity letters do not impress the reader's consciousness. The art of the type designer paradoxically aims at impressing the reader by being inconspicuous. He is constantly striving to create letters that are more legible and which make the printed page more beautiful.

One of the world's foremost members of this craft, Frederick W. Goudy, spent 35 years designing 73 type faces. Although few recognize his name all who read see specimens of his handiwork daily.

His art means this to him: "The main purpose of making letters is the practical one of making thoughts visible. However, they have as well a decided decorative quality, quite apart from any ornamental treatment of the separate characters. Letters need only to be simple, well shaped and well proportioned. Beauty is not to be sought at the expense of practical use."

How different from most of the other arts is the art of type design.

Some men who win loving cups would find saucers more handy.

Money may not mean everything, but almost everything means money.

HOLLYWOOD.—The picture Douglas Fairbanks proposes to make in China turns out to be the star's most ambitious project in years.

To carry it through will require many months of shooting and the use of entire armies of men.

Doug sat on the arm of the barber chair in his dressing-room yesterday and gave me a brief outline of his plan. To explain it fully, he said, would require hours.

In a few words, his idea is to photograph two parallel stories—one embracing the entire pageantry of Chinese history—the other a saga of a modern war-lord who succeeds in uniting the multiple factions of his country, only to have them slip back out of his hands. Symbolically, the stories will illustrate that as soon as a man or a race learns laughter at self, the driving power of achievement is at an end.

The germ of this idea Doug conceived to the tune of roaring motors while flying over a little town in Java. Once in China, he developed it through the cooperation of Tong Shou Yi, first prime minister of the country, and Dr. Shuh, leading Chinese scholar.

Anyone who has known Doug over a period of years has learned that these sudden enthusiasms often come to naught, but this time he appears to be unusually keen on his idea. He thinks enough of it, at least, to plan another trip to China as soon as he can wheedle Mary away from her picture work. On this second trip, he will make an exhaustive survey into the practicability of the project. If the results satisfy him, he will then return to Hollywood and organize a staff to put the undertaking over.

A group at a Hollywood late spot were reminiscing about New Year's eve of other years.

Someone recalled the time when two cronies of John Barrymore turned up at his house to find him stretched out in an easy chair, pipe in his mouth and calmly reading.

HOLLYWOOD PARADE.

The Mayfair Club is plenty burned over Elsa Maxwell's criticism of their parties as dull. They point out that one of the main objects of the Mayfair is to hold down expenses and turn over profits to the motion picture relief fund. With just pride, they point out that this sum has never been under $5,000.

Some of the individual members of the club also are leveling criticism at that big party which the London hostess engineered over the holidays for Gary Cooper. All in all, it looks like the makings of a swell argument.

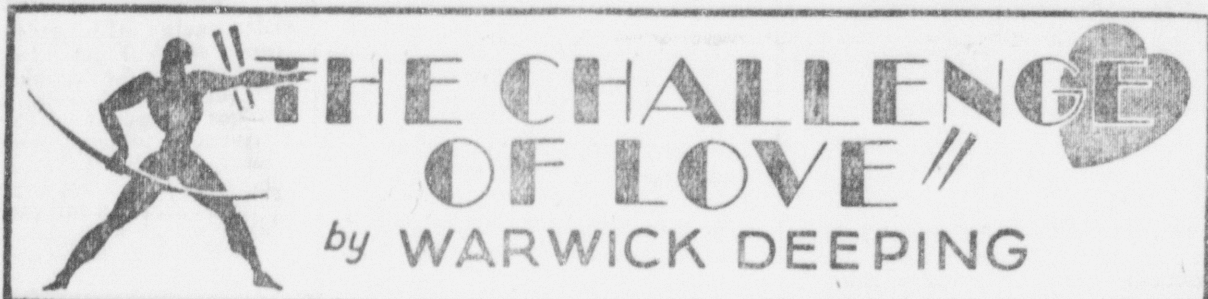

When James Cagney pushed a grapefruit into Mae Clarke's face, the film public was startled and then entranced. Since then, the ingenuity of scenarists has been taxed to find new ways for the actor to push his leading women around.

Latest idea is to have the red-headed star drive a ping-pong ball into Alice White's face. As this isn't so easy to do, the "Picture Snatcher" company prepared to take a half day to get the scene. But they figured without Cagney.

On the first take, he smacked the celluloid pellet straight to Alice's eye. Even Alice couldn't evade the coincidence.

They tell an amusing story about Ginger Rogers' Christmas. It seems the people who decorated Hollywood's Santa Claus Lane forgot to use a picture of Ginger. Consequently, Mervyn Leroy had a big replica made and put it on the top of her tree. He also played Santa with an ermine wrap.

DID YOU KNOW?—That Una Merkel made her stage debut as one of the college students in "The Poor Nut"? She had one line to say, "Come on, Wisconsin," and received $3 a night for her labors.

CHAPTER FORTY-FIVE

Wolfe was shown into the paneled dining-room at "Pardons" two hours after Threadgold had left in a huff. A log fire burnt in the open fireplace, throwing a warm light on the Jacobean wainscoting that had not been Victorianized with paint or canvas and wall-paper. The inlay work and the carving over the fireplace were very fine. Wolfe was standing and examining it and warming himself at the fire when Mrs. Brandon entered.

She was wearing a dress of some tawny stuff that glowed like yellow metal in the brown light of the room. Her eyes looked straight at Wolfe, a little haughtily. Her pallor and her reserve were natural to her. Strangers were kept at a distance. Moreover, she wished Wolfe to understand that her sending for him was the result of sheer necessity.

"My son has broken his leg. Dr. Threadgold could do nothing with him. I sent for you."

"I see."

"It is an emergency."

She was brought to pause by the expression on Wolfe's face. It was as though he had said: "I understand you perfectly. But do not qualify your condescension. I am not the man to suffer it."

She said curtly: "Will you come upstairs? I must tell you the boy is very nervous."

Wolfe followed her in silence, like a physician summoned from a hostile camp to minister chivalrously to an enemy who lay ill.

Once in the room he walked straight to the bed, and held out a hand. Aubrey Brandon eyed him sulkily, a wild animal ready to bite.

"This is a piece of bad luck, sir. Too much daring, eh? They ought to have had a good run, too, out at Cheston. Plenty of room for a gallop."

It was the attitude of a man towards a man, frank, and unstrained. After a moment's hesitation, Aubrey Brandon's head came out. Wolfe gripped it gently, and sat down beside the bed.

"Taking a stiff jump, was that it?"

"Yes—"

"You rascal! That's where you dashed fellows show your muscle. I have had a broken leg myself, under a cart wheel in London. It makes a man grit his teeth, especially when a clumsy beggar of a policeman gets hold of you. No, I shan't hurt you much. It's just what I don't want to do."

The boy's face brightened perceptibly.

"You know—it does hurt."

"Haven't I felt it myself?"

"It takes some pluck not to yell."

"You're not going to yell."

He leaned up to the boy's vanity and quipped it.

"We shall have to take these gaiters and boots off, and those riding-breeches. And when we have got you nicely trussed up, we'll put you to bed. You see I shall just cut off the buttons, slit the laces and the seams, and pick you out like an egg out of a shell."

Aubrey's eyelids flickered.

"Do you think I might have a little brandy?"

"Brandy? No harm at all."

"Of course to stick it—you see!"

"I'm going to tell you I would always rather look after a fellow who can ride."

"Have you seen the article in this paper?" Mrs. Brandon asked Wolfe.

A shallow swagger had come into the boy's eyes. Wolfe had flicked the right mood. They were men of the world who understood each other. None of your "Poor little man, did 'ums then—"

Ursula Brandon, holding one of Aubrey's hands, sat and watched Wolfe at work. He was cheery, resourceful, unfurled, chatting a while upon the boy's face. His deftness and his gentleness were remarkable. Once or twice Ursula Brandon glanced at the man's profile. She had a peculiar sense of being dominated, interested against her will. The article in the "Wannington Clarion" recurred to her. This was the man whose destiny it would be to utter such truths. The word truth forced itself forward. It was uncompromising, refusing to be represented by some urbane and euphuistic interpreter.

In half an hour Wolfe had Aubrey Brandon splinted up, undressed, and put to bed. There had been a moment's whimpering and some faltering of the boy's fortune over the setting of the bone. Wolfe had handled the youngster one of his leather gloves.

"Bite into that, old chap. I know it will hurt for a moment, but we shall soon be through."

And Aubrey had borne the pain with patience that had surprised his mother.

She felt grateful to Wolfe, and impressed by the way he had handled the boy. Wolfe was packing up his bag, and talking to Aubrey.

"You went through like a Trojan. Now I want you to keep quite still. You know. The leg may hurt you a bit, and you'll feel uncomfortable, but you'll grin and bear it. It won't last long."

He crossed over and shook hands. "I say, do you remember stopping my pony in Bridge Street?"

Wolfe smiled.

"I do."

"You'll come again to-morrow?"

"If I'm needed—of course I will."

"I won't have old Threadgold."

"There, there, Aubrey, dear, don't talk so much. You'll tire yourself."

She was thinking as she descended the stairs, very conscious of the man behind her. He had not spoken since they had left the boy's room. Silence—ever to a silent person—may be problematical and alluring. Ursula Brandon felt a sudden desire to touch the real inwardness of this man.

"Supposing there should be much pain?"

"I can send you something to keep him easy. We don't want the splints torn off. But I understand that Threadgold will resume the responsibility."

She was surprised at her own answer. It escaped like some headstrong impulse.

"No."

"Then you wish me to come again?"

"If you will."

"But with regard to Dr. Threadgold?"

"He washed his hands of the case. The boy would not obey him."

The copy of the "Wannington Clarion" lay on the broad oak window-seat, a patch of whiteness in the sunlight.

"Have you seen the article in this paper?"

She crossed the room, picked up the "Wannington Clarion," and held it out to Wolfe. She watched his face as he took it from her.

"I don't know who sent it to me. Such things make one angry for the moment."

"I don't know who sent you the paper. I have read the article, because I wrote it."

He met her eyes.

"I had guessed that."

She was neither angry nor contemptuous. Her face had a white, serious gravity, and there was no mistrust in her eyes.

"I was angry at first. But there was a reasonableness, an absence of vulgarity—"

"I assure you—"

"Yes, it was that one distrusts such a paper as this. It is so contemptible that—well, I had to get rid of prejudices."

She looked at him with frank earnestness.

"I know I may ask you—"

"Anything you please."

"These things, they are true?"

"As far as I know truth."

"Thank you."

He began to pull on his gloves.

"Mrs. Brandon, I can assure you of my sincerity. I am one of those men who want things altered. I am not a squabbling politician."

"No."

He went out, feeling vaguely astonished.

PATERSON WINS BY ONE POINT OVER THE "HIBOS"

(By T. M. Juno)
 Failure to stop "Joe" Frankovic, lanky center for the Paterson Parchment Paper Company meant defeat for the A. O. H. five last night as the Paper Makers scored a one-point victory. Final tabulations were: Paterson, 32; Hibernians, 31.

Frankovic amassed seven field goals and three fouls for a total of seventeen points to lead the Paper Makers to victory. He was a target for the "Hibos" on the defense, getting the ball on the rebound from the backboard and holding it high in the air until he was set to pass it. Frankovic is six feet, four inches tall and had no trouble out-reaching the Hibernian players.

Sawickie and Pelcher also made their debut with the Parchment Company's five and gave a good exhibition considering the fact that they were playing against one of the strongest teams in the circuit.

The Corson Street boys tied the count on several occasions and at one time took a short lead but Frankovic's scoring was too much for them. The winning field goal was scored by the tiling points were scored by the pivot man of the Paper Company.

John Dougherty brought the spectators to their feet in the last thirty seconds of play by shooting a long one from the left side of the court with the "Hibos" one point behind. The sphere hit the rim, bounced up and took a ride around the rim but dropped on the outside into the outstretched arms of Frankovic. After this all hope for a Hibernian victory was gone.

ODD FELLOWS SCORE AN UPSET, LEAGUE STANDING

(By T. M. Juno)
 The Odd Fellows scored a big upset in the league standing by counting a one-sided victory over the Hawks. The final count stood 30-18. The "Oddies" held the lead from the start and were never headed.

The ultimate winners were in form last night and caught the Hawks off their guard. During the first half the Hawks only scored one field goal. They made five fouls during this period to give them six points.

The Hawks lost plenty of chances to score from the charity mark. They had twenty-one tries and only netted six of these. "Oil" Wright, usually a good shot from the foul line, had sixteen tries and only made five.

"Freddie" Hibbs scored four field goals and one foul to lead the Odd Fellows' scoring. Harry Kendig, one of the league's leading scorers was blanked from the field although he did make a foul shot.

Do YOU KNOW THAT . . .

John Plant, who was a star player on the old Bristol basketball team, many years ago, when Bristol won the National League championship, is now one of the athletic instructors at Bucknell University. Plant had an intense desire to obtain an education, and after the disbanding of the Bristol team, although past the college age, he obtained a position as coach at "Piedmont" with the privilege of matriculating in the college educational course.

He accordingly attended the classes with the boys whom he coached in basketball, and shortly after his graduation, was offered the position at Bucknell which he now holds. Plant was well liked by the Bristol fans, and it is a pleasure to know that through his determination and stick-to-itiveness he has made a success of life.

"Phenom" Smith, who was manager of the Bristol National League basketball team that won the pennant, was in Bristol last summer. He is now living in New Hampshire. Although well advanced in years, he has signed up for next spring, to coach baseball in one of the New Hampshire colleges.

It will be remembered that "Phenom" was at one time a pitcher on the old Bristol baseball team, when the field was located in the fourth ward, back of the ice house, near the mill pond.

To Study Effects Of A Repeal By Congress

By Robert F. Gorman
 (I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

HARRISBURG, Jan. 17.—(INS)—Faced with the prospect of having the State's dry enforcement law automatically modified by act of Congress, Pennsylvania's Assembly today had the opportunity of setting up machinery to meet the situation.

Both Rep. Philip Sterling, Philadelphia, and Rep. Chester H. Rhodes, Monroe, introduced measures which reminded the Assembly of the conditions which may arise if Congress modifies the Volstead act or repeals prohibition while the Legislature is disbanded.

Rep. Rhodes asked merely for a study of these conditions. His presentation was a resolution providing for the creation of a commission to make a thorough study of the liquor laws and the effects in Pennsylvania of Federal modification or repeal.

Rep. Sterling proposed methods of meeting the conditions which the Monroe member seeks to have scrutinized. Sterling would set up by law a State liquor commission to control traffic in intoxicants. The bill provides for a liquor tax, to be specifically fixed later, with 75 per cent of the amount collected to go to the counties on a basis of population and the remainder to the state.

The Rhodes commission of inquiry would have a personnel of seven, two to be appointed by the Speaker of the House, two by the president pro tempore of the Senate, and three by the Governor.

Uncle Sam's Only Lady Soldier Veteran of Twenty-Five Years

Warrant Officer Olive Hoskins was on Mexican border — denied right to go to France — now headed for another "hitch" in Philippines.

U.S. TROOPS ON PARADE IN PHILIPPINES

On the eve of packing her kitbag before sailing for another "hitch" in the Philippines, Warrant Officer Olive L. Hoskins, who bears the distinction of being the only honest-to-goodness woman soldier in the United States Army, looks back over her twenty-five years service with Uncle Samuel's fighting forces. The only fault she has to find with her career is that she was denied the privilege of going overseas with the army during the World War. Hoskins has been an army clerk since 1907 when she took a civil service examination in the Philippines. In 1916 when headquarters were established, she became an army field clerk with the rank of Major. Soon after she was transferred from the Philippines to the Mexican border. After the mission was completed, she was ordered back to San Francisco. On the United States mainland, Hoskins did all in her power to persuade the War Department to allow her to go "Over there," but her request was denied. During the period of hostilities she was attached to the War Department and found interesting, if not so hazardous. Warrant Officer Hoskins has no intention of leaving the army "while they need me," and she has no service the woman warrior has never worn a uniform.

SUMMIT, N. J., Jan. 17.—The nicest thing about the United States army is that it is made up entirely—well, almost entirely—of men. That is what Warrant Officer Olive L. Hoskins, the U. S. Army's one and only honest-to-goodness woman soldier, thinks about the force to which she belongs.

You may wonder why Miss Hoskins sides with the men against her own sex. Well, she explains that during her 25 years in the army she has learned to know men. She thinks that they are invariably more honest than women; that they are not so petty, nor so irritable nor so jealous.

Warrant Officer Hoskins, who is in Summit on furlough before starting off for another "hitch" in the Philippines, has labored among Uncle Sam's fighting men since 1907. In that year, while visiting a sister in the Philippines, she took a civil service examination, came through with flying colors and got a salary of $1,200 a year.

There she stayed, doing clerical work, until 1916, when an army order decreed that all headquarters clerks were to become field clerks, ranking in the army proper. Thus did Miss Hoskins become Uncle Sam's only feminine doughboy.

Soon after the abolishment of headquarters clerks, Miss Hoskins, now a warrant officer, was transferred to San Francisco, and from there ordered to the Mexican border for eleven months during the little misunderstanding we had with our Southern neighbor. When the border business was all cleared up, she was sent back to Western Department Headquarters at San Francisco.

On the United States entering the World War, Warrant Officer Hoskins used all her powers of persuasion in an effort to have herself sent overseas. She even tried to bring influence to bear in Washington to be assigned "Over There," but the powers-that-be were adamant. Miss Hoskins was valuable in San Francisco, her superiors said, and there she would have to stay.

However, if her work on the West Coast lacked the excitement and hazard of the front line, it was at least interesting. Miss Hoskins was attached to an intelligence unit for the duration of hostilities, and while in that post she got firsthand information of everything that was going on at home and abroad.

One of the most interesting angles of her job was that of listening to the reports of the intelligence service men. These were chiefly composed of newspapermen, lawyers and at least one actor. Miss Hoskins is too good a soldier to gossip, even now that peace reigneth, about what she heard, although it is a safe bet that some of the items would make engrossing reading. She learned long ago that a good soldier is a good listener and a poor talker.

In 1919, when the boys came marching home, Miss Hoskins volunteered for more Philippine service. Her request was granted and she was assigned to the Judge Advocate's office, where she stayed until 1922, when she was ordered back to the United States to the headquarters of the Seventh Army Corps Area, at Omaha.

Now after ten years in that office, she is once more headed for the Philippines. Warrant Officer Hoskins thinks there is nothing remarkable about her unique position as the only woman soldier in Uncle Sam's Army. She avers that any stenographer in one of the nation's big cities has had a more colorful and eventful life. During her entire service of twenty-five years, she has never worn a uniform. In five years, she will be eligible to retire on pension, but she says she won't do that "if they need me, or if there's a war."

WINTER SPORTS—NOW IN THE LIMELIGHT!

The BOBSLEDDERS

ARE COMPETING IN THEIR CHAMPIONSHIP RACES AT LAKE PLACID DURING JANUARY AND FEBRUARY...

Billy FISKE'S

Olympic Bobsled champions will be among the contenders at Lake Placid.

BURNLEY

HERE we are in mid-winter again, mates, and so far this year I don't think I've mentioned a thing about ice-skating or snow-shoeing, skiing or bobsledding or—well, let's see—what are a few other wintry-sounding sports?

Anyways, the ice-skaters and the bobsledders are in again, breaking into the sport headlines now and then.

Up at Lake Placid, N. Y., the daredevil bobsledders are already competing in their exceedingly dangerous speed races, hurtling down the steep and icy slopes of the famous Mt. Van Hoevenberg bob run at terrific speeds.

Last year the winter Olympics were held at Lake Placid and the bobsledders came in for a lot of attention. The Olympic bobsled champions, both the four-man and the two-man teams, will be among the entrants in the North American and national championships which will be held during the next few weeks at Lake Placid.

The American four-man bobsled team which holds the Olympic and world titles is composed of Billy Fiske, driver, Jay O'Brien, brakeman, Eddie Eagan (remember him?—the former Olympic lightweight boxing champion) and Clifford Gray. Another famous four-man team that will be racing in the championships is the Saranac Red Devil team driven by Henry Homberger, which holds the record for the Mt. Van Hoevenberg course: 1:52 minutes for the mile-and-a-half run.

The speed skaters are also coming in for their share of notice. Five of America's leading speed skaters are now in Trondheim, Norway, where they will compete against the Norwegian skating stars and in the world's championships at Oslo.

The American aces are Eddie Schroeder of Chicago, who beat two Chicago rivals, O'Neill Farrell and Eddie Murphy, in a special race shortly before he left; Valentine Bialis, well known Utica speedster; Bert Taylor, another Chicago star; Carl Springer of Brooklyn, and Eddie Wedge of Detroit.

Over in Norway they will race against such famous skaters as Ballangrud, Thunberg and Evensen in special meets scheduled for Feb. 17 and 18.

Meanwhile, Irving Jaffe, who won two skating titles in last year's Olympics, has turned pro, and is travelling around the country racing against the leading professional speed skaters.
